Introduction

A short summary of the work I did during the second Sprint for Team 1's Goofy-Lights-Editor. I looked into different UI themes, read other people's code and checked out different Color picker options.

Summary

I looked over the code from last sprint to try to get a better understanding and scope of the project. I also looked into and tested different theming options for the app, but decided that the default is actually the best (and simplest). I tried implementing a free Qt color picker that Joshua found, but I didn't have much success. I'm going to take another crack at it next week, and invest more time understanding the basics of Qt. It has quite the learning curve.
